THE Reports on the China trade for the year 1870, which have just been issued by the Imperial Customs, contain as usual much valuable information; but they are somewhat disappointing from the absence of any reports on the two most important places, namely, Shanghai and Tientsin. Canton, we observe is also excluded; and it is to be presumed, therefore, that the present volume is only an instalment of the usual series of papers.

Turning to Foochow, as the port next in interest to Shanghai and Tientsin, we find that BARON DU MERITENS, Commissioner of import trade. He notes a constant decrease in the quantities of Opium, and an almost Foreign bottoms. With reference to the first point, he attributes the falling off in the Opium trade entirely to the excessive lekim duties. > THE COMMUNISTS BEFORE THE COURT MARTIAL.

(From the Times' Special Correspondent.). VERSATLLES, Aug. 18 Lullier, who since I last wrote has played perhaps the principal part in the proceedings t the Court-Murvial, occupies an altogether different position from the rest of the secused When the insurrection broke out on the 18th of March, he took command of the National Guard, and for a few days, in the general confusion, noted, or fancied he was acting, the part of Military Dictator. This appears to have given offence to the Comité Central, who had him arrested; and, though subsequently released, he remained the avowed enemy of both the Comité and the Commune, and still entertains for them a dislike and contempt which he is at no pains to conceal. Yesterday he threw the whole Court into convulsions of laughter, in which even the grave President could not bely joining, by the indignant vehemence with which be contrasted his own activity during the inturday morning on a scaffolding in that loca- ledged (no stamp) in the Pekin Gazette of the the meeting was that authorising the Directors leagues. This was too much for Lullier, who certainly, if one may judge from his conduct in Court, does not require uny artificial stimulant to excite him, so he rose and declared that during four days be bad only slept five hoursthe first day, one hour upon a chair; the second, one hour upon a chair; the third, hours upon a sofa: and during this time what were they doing at the Hotel de Ville? They wore laughing; they were singing, young continieres, "bien choisies, poured out in deep draughts the wine of triumph." The auddenges of the attack, the quarter from which it came, from the midst of the men themselves attacked, and, above all, the indignant energy of the orator's tones and delivery, who spoke as if he had been an ancient prophet ashing the vices of a degenerate age, would have been too much for the gravity of any Court, and yesterday the whole room went into roars some very good skits, and the sketches are of langhter. The amusement was naturally not also very well executed. On the whole, however, liminished when an elderly, highlyrespectable we do not think it comes quite up to the previous numbers. The following will no doub be read with interest in Hongkong, as well as indignantly to protest that he had no share in such proceedings, and knew nothing about them. This is not the first time that Lullier has upset really deserves considerable licence. The contrast between his manly, outspoken profession of faith, and the contemptible quibbling and shirking of the prisoners who preceded him, is, to use a cant phrase, positively refreshing. Lullier has not for a moment attempted to disayow his share in the insurrection; on the contrary, be glories in it, and seemed thoroughly in his element as he gave an elaborate sketch of

He seems to have been elected member of the Commune not so much by his own sooking as because his neighbours admired his character and opinions,-which he himself describes as the "Socialist doctrines of Proudbon. He was one of the first members elected, and for tome time before the Commune commenced the arbitrary course which afterwards signalized it, he remained quietly working at the post on the Committee of Finance. But he soon became disgrated at the violence of the majority of his colleagues, against whose policy be in vain protested, and at last he fairly broke with them on the question of the law about the Hostages, After this he practically withdrew from the body, never attending any of their meetings, and wished formally to send in his resignation, but the inhabitants of the 15th Arrendissement, of which he was the Maire. implored him on their account not to do so. but to consent to remain in office for the purpose of protecting them. He remained, however, to the last moment working at his Mairie, and exerting all his influence to prevent the arbitrary arrests, requisitions, and various similar outrages upon private liberty and property which diagraced other parts of Paris. Evidence was produced to show that he had even the courage and, what it, perhaps, atill more remarkable, the power to protect the clergy of his Arrondissement. and that the Sisters of Mercy were able to pursue their labours in it unmolested, though wearing a religious dress. When the crash came, and the army got into Paris, Clement looking conspirator, thus accused of dallying at took over £400-a fortune for a man in his poa great State crisis, with young continières, rose sition—to his former employer, asking him to take care of the money as it belonged to the poor, and adding that all was lost, as the Commune was full of "vieuz' Jacobins, who would the gravity of the Court, but he is allowed, and do their best to destroy Paris." The gravest charge against bim, after those of armed insurrection, resistance to lawful authority, in citement to civil war, &c., was that he had treated some Sisters of Mercy; but the witness called to establish this, a priest, could only depose that he had seen Descamps speak to a Sister. in a very brusque, off-hand manner, "with a twirl of his moustache." What ought the authorities to do with a political prisoner of this kind? It seems a positive waste of so precious a commodity as justice to punish him, even nominally or lock him up, unless it were in busrity to keep him in bread. If it would be against offi cial etiquette or propriety, to give bim the policemen's place he was before refused, why should not the Party of Order subscribe a shill ling a day, or whatever sum can be offered to an ex-member of the Commune without harting his feelings, on the sole condition that he either goes about with a placard stating "I was a member of the Commune," or, it this would-make him too much of a lion, that he pledge himself to mention the fact on all possis ble occasions? If he fulfilled this one coudition-and he seems to be a simple, honest sort of fellow, free from fulas pride or reticencehis keep would be well earned.

POSTAL STEAMERS TO AUSTRALIA BY THE CAPE.

· Mr. Baillie Cochrane presents his compliments to the Editor of the Daily News, and begs to forward the enclosed copy of correspondence which he has had with the Postmanter-General.

19th August, 1871. House of Commons, August 4. My dear Monsell,-As I have failed in finding a suitable opportunity for discussing the important question of a new line of postal steamers to Australia via the Cape: I must briefly submit my views to you in the form of a letter. So far back as 1840 public attention was directed to the importance of this route to our Australian Colonies, and at that time the population was not one-tenth of what it is at present. Then, however, Lieutenant Waghorn carried out his idea of the overland route which has been so admirably organized by the Peninsular and Oriental Company, but this monthly communication is far from being sufficient, even for the postal service, for the letters have increased, even within the last six years, 58 per cent. Without in any way undervaluing the overland route, there are manifest advantages by the Cape; the distance to Melbourne is within a few miles the same, the Great Britain now performs the voyage in 55 days, and, in suitable steamers, it may be secomplished in 45 days. Vessels of 4,000 tons will afford accommodation at low rates for the younger sons of men of family, and for that class it, is of so much importance to reach, third-class emigrants. The fares would be-third-class, £15; second-class, £40; and first-class, £60, and the painful sense of distance would be diminished. This route would not be affected by troubles in the East, and the dangerous voyage of the Red Sea would be avoided. A subsidy of £80,000 will do all that can be required, and this is not much to ask ufter the great economy that has been made by the withdrawal of the troops. Assuredly we should do all in our power to bind our colonies to the mother country, and I am sure the Executive desire to do so. The colonists ching in all things great and small to the mother country. On New YORK -A colonist told me the other day that in th wildest parts of the back settlements copies of the Times and Illustrated may be found. By these new steamers you will create a fleet worthy of your colonial empire, and Great Britain will more and more closely bind herself with what the honourable member for Chelsea truly called Greates Britain. - I remain, &c., A. BAILLIE COCHRANE.

To the Right Hon, William Monsell, M.P. My dear Baillie Cochrane, -I am sorry that you were not able to find a day to bring forward your question. I think if our policy is to be judged by its results that we ought to compensate New Zealand, the only one of the Australiaian colonies where the Imperial military expenditure was large, rather for having kept Imperial troops there so long than for having removed them. As the cost of sending each emigrant to Australia is less than £15, and as each inhabitant contributes, on an average, from £2 5s, to £3 10s, to the exchaquer of the colony in which he resides, funds spent by those colonies in bringing out emigrants would yield from 15 to 20 per cent. But even if emigration were a less paying concern I doubt whether it would be expedient to mix it up in any way with postal arrangements. If we were to consider the convenience of passengers we should seriously interfere with the rapid transmission of letters at home, and if we were in any way to accommodate to emigration our postal colonial service it would probably suffer both in cheapness and expedition: The great steamers plying between Japan and San Francisco, built so as to afford good passenger accommodation, find it, I understand, impossible to maintain a higher spend than 8 knots (a rute which would be altogether unsatisfactory D PORT for the year 1870. Price $10. for postal purposes). Certainly steamers
